Course Description and Objectives:
This course will examine issues in American Women’s history through the study of witchcraft. A majority of the class will be an intense look at the Salem Witch Hysteria in 1692. The class will also cover other cases of witchcraft in the Atlantic World and how society viewed and dealt with the supernatural. Instruction will include lectures, group work, readings, videos and discussions. Personal opinions and perspectives are both welcomed and desired in the class discussions; however, students are expected to know the issues and interpretations presented in the readings and the lectures. Ultimately, the course provides an introduction to the histories of gender, race, and religion in the age of colonization, while providing a lens into the interaction of European and non-European cultures in Colonial America and the ways that history has rewritten the memory of these events for modern spectators today.

This is an upper level course in American history designed for all students, no matter what their major or minor. History helps us to not only understand the past, but to make informed decisions in the present, by appreciating how previous generations have dealt with crisis, conflict, dissention, gender, race, and religion in numerous ways.

In addition to content issues, the practice of history also teaches and sharpens numerous skills that all students, no matter what their eventual career paths, need to master to compete in the 21st century world. Critical reading skills, writing proficiency, research methods, document analysis, public speaking, and argument formation are all skills that will be dealt with in this course.

The course objectives for are therefore:
- To draw connections between the past and the present.
- To understand historical debates.
- To work with primary documents and develop an understanding of how historians use documents to interpret the past.
- To critically analyze a historical text.
- To write clear and coherent essays that develop a historical argument.
Required Texts

There will be other articles and book chapters that the Professor will provide electronically each week.
